MRS. WRIGHT'S ADDRESS

Those who were not able to hear Mrs. Gordon Wright's address on "Citizenship" as delivered in Trinity church, missed a rare treat. Her manner of presenting the subject showed much thought and careful preparation. The partial Federal Franchise was given to women in the darkest year of the war, and was soon followed by full Federal, Provincial and Municipal Franchise, and to-day women have the vote on the same basis as men. The Federal and Provincial franchise require no property qualification, but the voter must be a British subject or a naturalized citizen, of the full age of twenty-one years. The municipal franchise requires a property qualification of $200, for a town like Napanee, that is, own a home assessed for $200, or rent a home assessed for $200, or assessed income of $200. If in a village or township, $100. Farmers' daughters have equal voting privileges with, farmers' sons.

Previous to receiving the franchise we were classed with the idiots, indians and criminals, as they were the only men who did not have the vote, but now that we have equal franchise, we, as women, have added opportunities and responsibilities which we must not shirk. A Nova Scotia woman, Mrs. Halsey Moore, was elected to the school board, and then made chairman by the courtesy of the board. Here are a few of the things she succeeded in accomplishing in her first year of office :

1. Enforced compulsory attendance.
2. Visited nearly all families represented in schools.
3. Found no decent maps, so repaired all poor ones.
4. Visited all schools.
5. Bought new globe.
6. Installed Union Jack.
7. Did utmost to raise the salaries of teachers.
8. Succeeded in getting supervised play grounds and the same cleaned, and grounds and fences put in order.

And now our responsibilities. Who shall measure them ? Before the war if the question had been asked, "What is Canada's greatest Asset ?" the answer would likely have been her great mineral wealth, or her timber, or her great waterways, but to-day the answer would undoubtedly be "the children."

The great majority of women to-day are ready and willing to go forward in the great world movement, but, alas, who is to lead them ? This is your opportunity, women, your responsibility. How are you meeting it ? Are you measuring up to it ? Are you willing to sacrifice your pleasures and your embroideries to assume these greater duties ? ARE YOU ? Are you willing to use your talents of leadership to forward the extension of Christ's Kingdom ? This sacrifice is needed of you. It is your obligation to your sisters and the children of to-day. This is your responsibility. One of the great questions of to-day is how to assimilate and Canadianize the foreigner. The immigrants from the war torn countries are coming to our shores in increasing numbers. We are menaced by the foreign element outnumbering our Canadian population and unless we evolve methods for educating and Canadianizing these people they may bring their foreign customs which would create conditions here similar to those of mid Europe prior to the war.

Our Women's Christian Temperance Union Missionary, Miss Forman, is to establish day classes for the foreign women, and visited them in their homes. She also had a Loyal Temperance Legion in every school in the city. During the stress of war work, this Canadianizing effort was turned over to the Assistance Society, but will be renewed with increasing vigor as soon as funds are available. It was at Ypres that our soldier lads made a determined stand against the advance of the enemy, which seemed to some people needless sacrifice, as the city had been completely destroyed. When the boys were asked why they did it, they answered that behind them lay their dead whose graves would be desecrated by the enemy. So we say to you to-day that we have a higher objective, for before us are our living, and we appeal to the women of to-day to stand fast, to safeguard the lives and morale of our children of to-day, for it is the highest objective to safeguard those children to-day so that the citizens of to-morrow, and the greatest asset of the state.

We can best guard this greatest asset by using our franchise on April 18th, 1921, to make effective prohibition, that "TWIN SISTER TO CITIZENSHIP."

One of our electric heaters or a coal oil heater will chase the chills out of the corners. A splendid line at WILSON'S Hardware.

FOR FLETCHER'S

CASTORIA

HEADLEY

The cold spell has turned the hockey feelings have been league formed season, and the some real good covered rink.

Three teams entered in the town league, Grand Trunk Co., The Bankers and the Furniture Co. The Clerks, and the air is already warm over the contention two players, viz. : "Bo" and "Mac" Loucks. Both Gerard's and Gibbard's Clerks want "Bo" intimated that draw if not given they claim the weak members of the association. The writer does not think this to be the case and is of the opinion that Gibbard's have the best financed outfit. The Clerks to make sport for sport's sake, decided to let Gibbard's have their own smooth over difficult situation.

The contention over "Mac" Loucks is that he is not a clerk, nor a banker, nor does he work at Gibbard's. He is just a plain "vagrant." He has been working at Gibbard's all summer, but when hockey season approached Gibbard's let him go, as they thought "Mac" was too slow to catch a place and he is such a nice, unassuming young fellow that they (Gibbard's) did not like to have any hard feelings towards him.

The bankers were given concessions to play both Ivan Spencer and Douglas so "Mac" is a clerk, and he should have no difficulty catching on with the "has beens."

Gibbard's, with McNeil as pivot man will prove a hard team to beat. Ross Loucks, Ralph the Johnston brothers and Fred Huffman are all fast men and pack wicked shots while in goal they are best furnished with Ray Huffman.

The Bankers have the nucleus of a good team, "Honey" Blue and "Curly" Wedge are both classy men, while Clarence Young Ivan Spencer and Douglas can hold their own in any company. They will have the pick of the N. C. I. students and no doubt will be able to get a good goal tender. The Bankers will be a hard team to beat and should be able to give a good account of themselves every time they step on the ice.

The Clerks or Town Boys have a host of material to pick from and no doubt will be able to form a good team. Tom Blute, Dewey McLaughlin and "Mac" Loucks are classy players and opposing teams will find that they hit this defence. Hawley Steacy is the ring in shape and indeed Napanee has a rink they should feel proud of. So if you purchase a ticket you will not only help the hockey boys, but better still, help the Park Association wipe up the deficit on the rink.

Work is about our new rink—It has been lengthened, making it now 176 feet long and 67 feet wide. A gallery has been built at the west end which will seat about 450 people. Standing room along each side of the walk will accommodate a couple hundred more spectators. Additional dressing room has been added, making Napanee's skating rink fill a long felt need in our town.

Cars for Hire.

We have cars for hire, day or night. Good cars. Good service. Prices reasonable.

DESERONTO

The annual Thanksgiving supper given by the congregation of St. Mark's church, Deseronto, was a complete success in every way. Five tables, laid with great taste, fairly groaned with everything that was good and that could tempt the appetite, and was done justice to by the large crowd that filled the hall. The ladies, out in full force, waited on the tables in the most efficient and prompt manner. Almost on time, 8 p.m., the tables were cleared away and the concert programme began, which proved to be of great merit, the following artists taking part : Mrs. Creeggan, Mrs. Spence, Misses Jean and Hilda McGreer ; Miss Marion Rennie, Miss Stocker, Miss Flossie Hall, Miss Dorothy Stout, Mrs. Childs, Miss McDonald, Mrs. A. H. Creeggan, Harold McGreer, Bert Bowen and Mr. Lyman. Rev. E. Radcliffe, as chairman, had the most pleasant duty to perform, as the numbers were really excellent and heartily applauded by a most good-natured audience. For a thoroughly enjoyable and all round good natured and harmonious evening the thanksgiving supper at St. Mark's church was a record this year.

The Gibraltar Tunnel.

In spite of the tremendous problems faced by French financiers in their task of rebuilding the entire economic system of France in the midst of the war, and the great work of factory and agricultural reconstruction now started, all of which entails the investment of billions, French capitalists have once more received a pre-war project almost as important in its scope as the building of the Panama Canal.

It is to construct a tunnel beneath the Straits of Gibraltar, connecting Europe with Africa and shortening by several days the passage of exports and imports between South America and Northern Europe.

With the tunnel completed goods could be shipped on trains from any point in Europe under the Straits to Dakar, where a four days' ocean voyage would bring them to Rio de Janeiro. The trip from Paris to Dakar would consume but three days.

The project is the work of the noted French engineer, Bertier, and has the backing of some of the largest of French bankers.

The Bertier tunnel will be twenty-five kilometers in length, dug at the shortest crossing between Gibraltar and the east trip of Africa. It was originally estimated that the building would cost 250,000,000 francs, but this sum, it is admitted, would be entirely inadequate to-day.

TERRORISM IN DUBLIN

Dastardly Murder of Fourteen Officers by Sinn Feiners

Effort Made by the Irish Republicans to Secure Important Documents Which the British Officials Are Supposed to Possess—Raids Took Place In Broad Daylight, With a Score of Men In Each Party.

LONDON, Nov. 23.— An orgy of outrages occurred in Dublin on Sunday. At nine o'clock in the morning officers and civilians connected with the conscription plan were assistant Sinn Feiners were sought out by gangs of desperadoes in the Gresham Hotel, and then in private residences, and shot down in their bedrooms, and in the presence of his wife. Fourteen were killed and five wounded. Four persons were captured, one of them being wounded.

In the afternoon the police, believing the murderers had come to Dublin under the guise of witnessing the hurley, or hockey, match between Dublin and Tipperary, surrounded Croke Park, where 3,000 spectators were collected.

Sinn Fein pickets opened fire on them. They replied, killing ten and wounding many. The excitement of the crowd which followed one woman and one man were trampled to death.

The fact that practically all the officers shot down were employed either as court-martial officers or in collating and preparing evidence against the Sinn Fein connection, in the official view, the outrages with the great progress that has been made in the last few days in quelling at the heart of the Sinn Fein movement.

About fifty important arrests in and around Dublin during the last week, sixteen on Saturday, and the correspondent is informed that a number of documents almost as startling as the contents of Lenin's orders published a few days ago have been seized.

The idea of the raiders, it is believed officially, was at one stroke to kill the principal prosecutors and to capture and destroy the evidence collected.

The murders were committed by gangs of from twelve to twenty men, as far as is known. They came in two and threes through the streets, like ordinary, peaceful citizens, and met outside the places to be visited. Then they forced their way in and killed their victims with practically no resistance.

At the Gresham Hotel I. A. Wilde was shot down while he was actually in bed, and former Capt. P. McCormack before his wife in his room, at 28 Upper Pembroke street Major bowling and Capt. Price were met as they were leaving, in uniform, their odrooms and shot to the doorways, while Col. Woodcock., Col. Montgomery, Capt. Kennelly and a Royal ots officer named Murray were ounded.

At 117 Morehampton road Capt. J. L. McLean and two civilians, T. H. Smith and a Caldon, were surprised in their bedrooms, taken to he top of the house and killed there.

At 38 Upper Mount street two officers, named Bennett and Ames, were iragged from their bedrooms to a rear room to be shot. The same method was used in butchering an officer named McMahon at 22 Lower lount street and Capt. Fitzgerald at 28 Earlsford terrace.

At 92 Lower Baggot street a gang of twenty-five men broke in. They found Capt. Newbury in a bedroom with his wife. He apparently had time to fire, for a prisoner captured here was wounded, but the captain was shot down at his wife's feet.

In many cases the murderers, before they left, made a hurried search for documents, it is supposed, in the hope of finding the evidence on which the Government is founding its prosecutions, but it is denied officially that they got anything of importance or that the death of the officers will hinder the heavy pressure the Government is putting on Sinn Fein. Moreover, the number of informers is increasing and Dublin Castle expresses the confidence that it is making real headway at last.

LEAGUE MUST BEWARE

Cannot Interfere With Supply of Raw Material.

Hon. N. W. Rowell Warns the European Statesmen That It May Cause Trouble If Attempts Are Made to Distribute Natural Resources—Question Was Raised by Representative From Belgium.

GENEVA, Nov. 23. — The Old World and the New clashed Sunday on the floor of the Assembly over the League's economic manifesto. Intimating that any head the assignments of the United States along with those of his own country, Hon. Newton W. Rowell, leading the Canadian delegation in the temporary absence of Sir George Foster, bluntly informed Leon Bourgeois to quit interfering with international distribution, his remarks on which were occasioned by a plea on Belgium's part for "some arrangement by which no one nation should have priority over raw materials," simply because deposits of them chanced to exist.

Tomaso Tittoni, chief Italian envoy, speaking as a member of the signatory Powers of the Versailles Conference, depreciated the categorical character of the Canadian's remarks, which immediately shut the door to all possibility of discussion and arraignment."

Mr. Rowell's speech was delivered in a very emphatic style that left no doubt as to the firmness of Canada's opposition to the Belgian delegate's efforts. "What is going on in the territory, unique in its entirety, from which humanity spoke as a whole, and not solely for profit and advantage in equal manner," He insisted that the League's primary function was the preservation of peace, and that economic dispositions came second.

Urging that for the discharge of its primary duties the League must include all the great nations of the earth—another argument for Germany's admission — Mr. Rowell commented as follows on its secondary activities: "If there is one idea held more tenciously than another in our midst it is the idea that it is that we must retain control of our own internal affairs."

"You can never expect the great nation south of Canada to become a party to this League so long as there is any suggestion of the control of the League of going to interfere in the domestic affairs of that country. Therefore, I think it is unfortunate to-day that there is assembly, and to the public, any proposal to the effect that the Covenant of the League covers the question of raw materials. To introduce it here and to obscure the primary function of the League is only to meditate failure. The League's efforts will jeopardize and impair the position we hold in the public estimation of the world."

Mr. Rowell also criticized the powers represented on the League Council for failing to support with appropriate action that body's decisions, de which Mr. Tittoni reported that the members of the council do not consider themselves the mouthpieces of their Governments, but rather as arbitrators, seeking to carry out the highest principles of justice and right.

The Italian made the address, which was in effect the council's own view of its activities, drew the fire of Leon Barnes, of Britain, because of its silence on the threatened war between Poland and Soviet Russia. "I protest," Mr. Barnes exclaimed, "against what I consider to be a policy of hush up with regard to this question."

Premier Millerand inquired if the British delegate desired to put down a formal motion in this connection, but no reply was given.

RUM-RUNNER SHOT.

Detroit Man Makes Charge Against Canadian Farmers.

CHATHAM, Ont., Nov. 23.— Five arrests have been made by Rich Constable George Peters in connection with the shooting of Frank Cornish, a Detroit barber and confessed rum-runner at the King Farm in Dover Township last week. Mr. Cornish is now in the St. Joseph's Hospital with gunshot wounds in his legs which are gangrenous and many say occasion the amputation of both legs. As a result of the story he has just told to the police to the effect that he was fired on by Frank King, King's house on a night upon which he was purchasing several cases of liquor, Frank King and his farm laborer named Gondreau were arrested on Saturday morning. Saturday evening three others were arrested, Eugene King, Alph King and Andrew King. The charge laid against each of the five men is "shooting with intent to kill and wound." They all pleaded not guilty and were allowed out on $10,000 bail each. They put up bonds for $5,000 each and the bail-piece of Frank King was signed by Thomas King, the father of two of the prisoners, Frank and Andrew King. All will probably be there being before Magistrate Arnold on November 30.

MAY CALL BACK "TINO."

Greeks Will Take Plebiscite on ex-King's Return.

PARIS, Nov. 23.—The Greek people will vote November 28 on the question of the return of ex-King Constantine to the throne. The Cabinet has decided for a plebiscite on this question on the date named. Constantine has cabled the Government that he will await the result of the plebiscite before returning to Greece.

It is rumored that former King Constantine of Greece has agreed to transfer his claim to the Greek throne to his son, Crown Prince George. The news of the former king's decision reached here Sunday simultaneously with the announcement that Admiral Mark Kerr had visited the former king at Lucerne on a definite mission to induce him to renounce his claim to the throne.

The Temps, in a leading editorial Monday, warns France and Great Britain that they are rapidity with which the new Greek Government is acting the Allies' will find themselves "in the face of a series of accomplished facts."

"To speak frankly," the newspaper adds, "the public does not understand how the Franco-British negotiations can be delayed by the regrettable indisposition of Earl Curzon of Kedleston, the British Foreign Secretary, and how, at the same time, a British admiral can be talking with the former King Constantine at Lucerne."

The Temps reminds the Allies that the "restoration has been accomplished" by the name of Olga as Regent of Greece and her issuance of a proclamation and instructions to the Government and the courts to act in the name of Constantine. It points out that the plebiscite in Greece will recall the former king and that the new Chamber of Deputies will ratify the Sevres treaty, thereby binding the signatories under article ten of the League of Nations.

The Temps quotes article ten and remarks that if the Turks or the Bulgarians should attack Greece, "France, Great Britain and Italy will be bound to intervene as members of the League of Nations."

M'DERMAND ELECTED.

Farmer Defeats Government Candidate in East Elgin.

AYLMER, Nov. 23.—The surprise occasioned by the election of Sidney McDermand, United Farmer candidate, by a majority of 208, in the East Elgin by-election Monday to fill the seat in the Federal House made vacant by the death of David Marshall, was no greater and no less than would have been aroused had either of the two opponents been successful. The inclement weather kept many at home and the vote was only about an average one.

In East Elgin electors have always been almost equally divided in their political leanings and the biggest majority ever given a Federal contest since Confederation was that of 394 given Mr. Marshall in the general election of 1911.

The division is substantially rural, the town of Aylmer being the only urban centre of any size. Aylmer, however, is a Conservative stronghold and gave Mr. Marshall a majority of 108. Mr. McDermand obtained only 97 out of a total of 1,257 votes. Thomas polled 634 votes in Aylmer, while 526 supported the Government.

In the surrounding district the fact that the United Farmers are well organized proved a material factor, although the Government candidate's 2,855 votes were fairly well distributed throughout the riding. Mr. McDermand's strength was largely in the townships of Dunwich, Dorchester, Mr. Charlton, however, was not a serious contender in many of the rural sub-divisions, the fight there lying practically between the Government and United Farmer forces.

TOWNSEND ELECTED.

British General Was Elected Over Labor Opponent.

WELLINGTON, Shropshire, Eng., Nov. 23.—Maj.-Gen. Sir Charles Townshend, the defender of Kut, was elected by a majority of 4,111 for Wrekin Division of Shropshire, according to the result of a by-election announced Monday night.

Gen. Townshend was given 14,586 votes to the 10,600 of his opponent, Charles Duncan, Labor candidate.

Gen. Townshend left England for the army when he drew no military assignment and was on the point of resigning his commission when the fall of the Crimea, when friends persuaded him to stand for Parliament. The general's friends declared he was fought defeated in other parts of the country. Seven vacancies were caused by the elevation, or Labor opponents to the peerage, and in these two Labor candidates were returned, the remaining seats being won by Ratepayers' Protection Association candidates.

SOUTH AFRICAN EMBARGO.

Canadian Grains Cannot Enter Sister Dominion.

OTTAWA, Nov. 23.—The Government has received cabled advices from Pretoria that the importation into South Africa of wheat, flour and meal is prohibited until further notice. The ground for the embargo is the foot-and-mouth disease.

Recent reports from W. J. Grant, Canadian Trade Commissioner in South Africa, indicate that Canadian exports of South African products are rapidly increasing within the last few years. The embargo will, of course, have the effect of closing this market due to lack of shipping. In 1913 South Africa imported $20,000 worth of flour from Canada, $36,000 worth of oats, $4,000 worth of barley and $2,250 in wheat. Canada secured $127,000 worth of wheat to South Africa during the year 1913, between 1913 and 1919, Canadian exports of oatmeal to South Africa fell from $76,000 to $70,100.

Gambling at Crockford's.

Public gambling in England was made illegal by an act of 1845, but the passing of that act mabilities for high stakes occurred nightly in Crockford's, and other clubs conducted clubs in the West End of London, in circumstances that guaranteed fair play and shut out the professional blackleg. This was the period of the Regency, with which the great name of Charles James Fox is always connected, but not continue into the Victorian era, but the clubs, of which was the last of the recognized gambling clubs, very high play at "hazard" went on nightly through the London season. Hazard is a rather complicated game played with dice, and it may be remembered that it was represented on the stage at His Majesty's Theatre during the run of a play called "The Last of the Dandies."

THE CASE OF ROCKWOOD

A chatty young person has been writing to the newspapers about the Hydro-Electric business of Rockwood. In polite phrase he declares that the "fact," as set forth in the official reports of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission are worthless, and that the Commission is juggling figures to mislead the public.

Rockwood began taking Hydro power in 1913. Its local assets consist of an overhead distribution system worth $4,314, line transformers, $1,211.93, meters, $1,263.28, street light equipment, $257.50, miscellaneous construction, $306.05, lands and buildings, $79, a total plant value of $7,438.56. Minor items bring the total Assets to $7,714.05.

The village has paid off debentures of $1,477.80 and has a depreciation reserve towards the renewal of its local plant of $1,722.00. It has outstanding debenture liabilities of $522.20, it owes the Hydro-Electric Commission $1,543.92, and the Bank $74.32. The total liabilities are $2,140.44, that is to say, the village has an equity of $5,573.61 in its local plant. In addition it has accumulated during six years an aggregate surplus of $2,200.30.

Rockwood engaged to buy power from the Commission at a rate which the Commission would fix, the understanding being that in the long run the money paid would be equal to the cost of producing and delivering the power. In 1919 the village paid to the Commission $2,102.34 out of a total revenue of $3,113.54. The Power Commission Act determines the subdivision of that money after it reaches the hands of the Commission. A proportion is set aside for sinking fund on the Central plant. Another proportion goes for a Renewals Fund, and the balance is used to pay the interest, operation and maintenance of that portion of the central plant for which the village of Rockwood is responsible. Since the capital and current cost of the central plant is a co-operative liability it varies from year to year in accordance with the number of municipalities, co-operating and with the amount of power distributed to each.

In 1919 the actual cost of power delivered at Rockwood, together with the special statutory charges, exceeded the amount collected from Rockwood by $511.02. The village owes the Commission that amount and must pay interest on it until it is paid. In previous years the shortage reached a total of $1,680, but in 1919 the former liability was reduced by $717.11. The shortage of 1919 together with an interest charge of $67.23 brought the net shortage to $1,542.92, which amount is carried by the local system as a liability.

But the local operation in six years has accumulated a surplus of over $2,200. In a word, the village has collected from consumers $657 too much, while the Commission has collected from the village a shade too little.

If the chatty young person complains about the position of Rockwood he is hard to satisfy. Let it be set forth once more in summary.

Total assets $7,714.05. Total liabilities, $2,140.44

The suggestion that the figures are false or misleading is a bold and unwarranted attack upon the good faith of the Commission, the competence of the Provincial Auditor and the professional standing of the accounting firm of Clarkson, Gordon and Dilworth.

BIG CROP WAS WASTED

NEITHER GROWER OR CONSUMERS HAVE PROFITTED.

Amount of Fruit In Niagara Orchards In 1920 Established Something like a New Record, But Shortage of Sugar and Supplies Caused Much Waste and Outcome Was Unsatisfactory.

The fruit season just finished has been the most disappointing to growers and consumers of any in the past many years, and its effect is certain to be noticed for at least another season. Never in the history of fruit growing in the Niagara Peninsula was there so much waste of good material as there has been this season and it is doubtful if would-be consumers were ever more poorly supplied, even though the demand was not at all in keeping with the prosperous condition of the class of people usually looked to to account for the bulk of fruit crop in a season when the crop is heavy, and prices reasonable.

Because the first fruit of the season began to mature, a series of adverse conditions has occurred so far as both grower and consumer are concerned, and the result is that the bountiful crop has proved no greater benefit to the country than would have a very ordinary, or even a poor crop. Beginning with strawberries, the package shortage prevented efficient distribution, and to this was added the high sugar price, which became most evident when sour cherries began to come to the market, and continued through the plum season, making plums a drug on the market because people could not afford the expense of canning them. As a result of conditions when the crop was at its height, thousands of trees of cherries were left unpicked, and though plums were cleaned up fairly well, it is doubtful if the growers more than cleared expenses on the crop, in the face of prices that were no higher than those of pre-war times, when labor cost little more than half what it does now. Small fruits probably paid all who had them to sell, mainly because the supply was entirely too small for the number of consumers to be supplied. The production of strawberries and raspberries has got to a stage where it is so far behind the possible demand, that the amount of fruit available is only sufficient to provide for immediate consumption, and preserved fruit of that sort is becoming a thing of the past so far as the average consumer is concerned. Black currants, always a luxury, are now beyond the means of all but the rich.

The most that can be said about it by one who is not acquainted with all the underlying reasons, is that it was most unfortunate, that when a slight drop in sugar prices occurred, just when the season for best canning peaches brought a phenomenal supply of cheap fruit within reach of those who desired to preserve as large a supply as possible, the price of glass jars gave out. It is commonly remarked that it is impossible to continue with the manufacture of glass during the warm weather on account of the tremendous heat thrown off by the furnaces. But this is the case, surely the manufacturers of glass jars for preserving fruit have learned long before the weather gets too warm.

However, there are conditions within the control of the fruit growers that have been responsible to a great extent, for the unsatisfactory disposal of the peach crop this season. Much inferior fruit has been shipped. Fruit that is inferior in size, degree of ripeness, and general condition, made up far too great a proportion of the shipments arriving in Toronto, one of the principal markets. The resulted in a general low price being established, and consumers, having had experience of the low quality of the cheap fruit were afraid to bid higher for what looks like good fruit.

Size, which has a lot to do in determining the attractiveness of peaches to the average consumer, has been lacking in much of the fruit shipped this year. Growers can no doubt found who are willing to admit that this lack of size could have been avoided by thinning the crop, but they claim that the cost of the operation looked as though it was too great to permit of a profit under average prices. Labor costs were high when the time for thinning arrived, and moreover, such a big crop that of 1920 was not expected until the last moment. The big crop, after several years of short crops was responsible for much of the trouble in shifting the crop this season, and just because of lack of demand for baskets in the past two or three seasons, that many of the big manufacturers gave up making baskets, and it is possible that the same condition influenced the glass jar supply. In many sections, no special effort to distribute the crop was made until too late in the season, and last but not least, lack of production of fruit in the past seasons, has to bear some responsibility, with lack of production in other lines, for the increase in freight rates, which is no small item of expense in the fruit business.

Wheat Supply Approaching Normal.

Wheat shipments from the last season's crop in Argentina have exceeded all estimates, and in India the monsoon, on the whole, was favorable. The area under wheat in Australia is 55 per cent. above last year and 11 per cent. above the previous four-year average. The wheat crop is reported as good in Bulgaria, Denmark, France, Luxemburg, Netherlands, Roumania, Serbia-Croatia-Slavonia and Sweden; average in Germany, Scotland, Ireland, Poland and Czecho-Slovakia, and below average in England and Wales.

In Belgium, Spain, Italy, Switzerland, Canada, United States, British India, Algeria, Egypt, Morocco and Tunis, the wheat crop of 1920 is estimated to produce 45.9 million metric tons as compared with 49.0 millions in 1919 and an average of 50.1 millions during the five years 1914 to 1918.

Trick of Painter's Trade.

Many farmers do a great deal of their own painting, interior and exterior. An amateur painter cannot avoid some paint on the hardware, such as locks, hinges, handles, pulls, etc. This gives the finished job a botched appearance and partly spoils the effect of the new coat of paint.

Here is a little trick that the painter's trade that will serve the amateur painter well. Before beginning to paint the woodwork apple a coat of vaseline to the hardware; let the paint dry thoroughly; then wipe the vaseline off the metal parts and the paint will come off with it. This insures a neat, clean job of which the painter may be proud.

Count your stock of poultry, old and young, and make your plans to have the surplus handled so as not to crowd the birds you are going to keep over the winter.

LIVE STOCK TENDENCIES.

Cattle Increase for Swine Decrease in Western Canada.

A tendency to conservative progress is the most marked feature of the fall's prospects in Western Canadian live stock. A special correspondent of the Industrial and Development Council of Canadian Meat Packers now investigating conditions in the prairie provinces in view of the bountiful harvest, reports that two trends can easily be traced.

In the first place there is a steady development in the cattle industry. It is shown in an all round interest in better stock. Better methods of raising and more attention to marketing needs, both for the live trade and for packing plants. Losses caused by the recent foot and mouth outbreak winter are now estimated at about ten per cent. But its lesson has been learned. Immunization of stock herders are now growing more feed grains. This is partially lost sight of in the enthusiasm that a splendid wheat crop, running round about fifteen bushels to the acre probably, has aroused all through the West. Then, too, the poorer animals were sold off during the shortage and future stock will be improved by the weeding out that has taken place.

Where, even the cities, dairying has grown rapidly there is a tendency to take up the dual purpose cattle, namely Shorthorns and Herefords mainly, rather than the specifically milk breeds. Supplies of beef are not yet cut into as might at first sight appear.

But, in the second place, the supplies of hogs are down far below expectations. Farmers in Western packing plants are handling less than 40 per cent. of hogs compared with two years ago. The shortage in breeding sows has been of incalculable damage. A round fifty per cent. drop is none too much to attribute to the hog trade. Not only did the unfavorable price control and high prices of feed induce this, last fall and winter, but the extremely high price of labor for farm help seems to have discouraged it and may do so for two years or more, if present indications prove anything. Everybody able to judge deplores the fact, but they point to good prices for wheat and shrug their shoulders without prophesying too much. The opportunity for hogs in the East will be improved.

Yet one finds a pretty clear recognition that the Canadian bacon trade ought to offer bright prospects. Farmers and stockmen openly rejoice in knowing that the American hog is too fat for the Canadian packing plants. One packing plant not long ago experimented with hog carcasses bought within 180 miles from our international line, but in each shipment, though they specified low depths to their buyers, the hogs were too fat for either export Wiltshire or domestic cuts. Of course, this could be overcome by breeding the right type and by proper feeding.

The two conditions in the Western live stock industry might be summarized as follows:

1. A steady, cautious turn towards increased numbers of cattle of better quality.

2. A sudden slump in the numbers of hogs for which there appears to be no remedy for the next twelve months, and the indications are, in view of the abundant crop of cereals, now is the time to set into hogs.

SIXTY BELOW ZERO.

What It Means to Be In the Far North.

At 60 degrees below every stovepipe throws out a great white cloud of smoke and vapor, resembling a rushing, white waterfall, and this cloud streams away for from 50 to 100 feet, mingling with the other white-gray mist or haze that remains permanent in the atmosphere of the town like a great fog when it is 40 degrees or more below zero.

The white-gray fog is not fog as we know it, but is frozen fog, and every man, woman, child, animal and even the fire that burns is throwing out moisture into the air, which is immediately turned into a cloud of frozen vapor that floats away and remains visibly suspended in the air.

Very slowly this settles to earth, and in the morning, about the steps and any protected place, one can see a very fine kind of flourlike dust deposited, which is composed of frozen vapor.

Exposed ears, hands and noses freeze at this temperature in going the distance of about one city square. The breath roars like a mild jet of steam, while a dipper of boiling water thrown out into the air emits a peculiar whistling as its drops circle through the frosty atmosphere.

Prospectors attempting to boil a dish of rice or beans upon a camp fire unprotected from the weather, find that the fate of the dish that is in the fire will boil, while the part of the dish exposed to the weather has frozen. To remedy this the dish is set completely into the fire.

Edged tools subjected to this temperature become as hard and brittle as glass and will break readily from a touch. All vegetables, potatoes, apples, fruit, eggs and the like can be allowed to freeze until they become like bullets. To make ready for use place them in cold water half a day before using, and the frost will slowly withdraw without injury to the food. To attempt to thaw them out by the more rapid process of fire or hot water spoils them for use.

In such temperatures one must be very careful about touching things with unprotected hands. It is dangerous to take hold of a doorknob when it is 60 degrees below zero or thereabouts, unless one is careful instantly to release his hold, for if he does show this carelessness the inner palm of his hand will be frozen in five seconds. The result is the same as though he had touched a red-hot stove.

Kerosene begins to thicken at 40 degrees below, and at 60 and 70 degrees below becomes as thick an hard and looks very much like that substance only a little darker. It can then be cut out of the can with a knife in the same way that one cuts lard or butter.

Caring for Tomatoes.

The chief advantages of pruning and staking tomatoes are:

1. A larger number of plants can be set on the given area.

2. The tomatoes will ripen a little earlier when plants are pruned and staked.

3. The fruit is kept off the ground, is clean, easy to gather, and less likely to decay.

4. The quality of the fruit is usually better on plants that are pruned and staked.

MAKING A NEW TARIFF

COMMISSIONERS WHO HAVE IMPORTANT TASK.

Not Committed to Any Theory, for Though They Were Appointed by a Protectionist Premier, Their Political Careers Suggest That They Are Inclined to Lean Towards Lower "Wall."

As the Ministerial commission enters upon its task of ascertaining economic facts necessary to enable it to advise what must be done to produce a scientific tariff, it is interesting, to glance at the politics and personalities of the men upon whose findings much of the future fiscal policy of the Government will depend.

Sir Henry Drayton, to begin with, the commission chairman, is a politician who may be termed a realist in politics. The product of an environment where efficiency reigned far higher than political tradition, Sir Henry is of that type of practical, positive mind which is apt to brush aside theories and formulae, but believes that problems and issues must be met and solved by application of remedies suited to their needs. The extreme partizan, whether Liberal or Conservative, is frequently liable to have his freedom of judgment biased by devotion to principles and traditions, and to changing problems will often apply theories and methods which, however efficacious in their time, may be entirely unsuited to the hard realities of to-day. Sir Henry Drayton is the opposite of this type. Watching him in the House of Commons, and noting his career since coming to Ottawa, one could detect in him to the slightest degree for either Protection or Free Trade, as such. On the contrary, his speeches give the impression that he looks at regards such things not as political principles, nor as creeds, but as mere means to an end, to be adopted or discarded, as the circumstances, the needs of the country demand.

And so, insofar as the clearly defined limitations of the tariff by law of the Government will permit—for it must be remembered that the Ministry is not depending upon this Inquiry to give it a mandate for any policy having already been incorporated into the National Liberal and Conservative Party platform — we may confidently expect safely depend that Sir Henry Drayton's conclusions from the testimony to be presented will not be warped by any bigoted devotion to either Protection or Free Trade. One may doubt whether the Minister of Finance will make reference to economic theory, or to adherence to the Ministry's fiscal principles, but, on the other hand, and judging solely from Sir Henry's political record in Parliament and in the Cabinet there seems little reason for fearing that he will err on the side of the partizan, however, or class without regard for the country as a whole.

About Mr. Calder it is less easy to size him up. The silent man from the Plains remains one of the enigmas of Canadian politics. There are some who hold that Mr. Calder is the Chamberlain of Canadian Liberalism, that he has definitely crossed the Rubicon into the enemy's camp, and that from being a militant champion of freer trade he has become the friend of plutocracy and protection. But there are many who take issue completely, and they were married. Mr. Searles at that time was 46 years old.

They lived together happily for a short period and then Mrs. Searles died, leaving the whole fortune to her husband. He was not permitted to enjoy it undisturbed, but was immediately attacked in the courts by Timothy Nolan Hopkins, nephew of the deceased Mark, who declared that Searles had unduly influenced his brother. The matter was settled out of court, Mr. Hopkins receiving a couple of million, so it is said, and Mr. Searles keeping the remainder. The lawsuit, however, had embittered him, for it had dragged into publicity many details that he would rather have kept secret. He admitted that when he married Mrs. Hopkins, money had something to do with his decision, but declared that the dominant factor was love. The diary Mrs. Searles kept during her honeymoon and after, was produced and pathetically revealed the doting of the old lady upon her handsome husband. Apparently, she never regretted her choice, and since Mr. Searles certainly did not, the marriage was evidently a success. Mr. Searles became a recluse, finding his chief occupation in building a mansion in Methuen, Mass., where he had been born, and after local quarrels had driven him out of the place, in building elsewhere. He had a passion for stone walls and fences, and was continually building and tearing down so that something stronger might be reared. Armed guards were employed on his estate to keep intruders away, and his nephew says that the last time he tried to see his uncle he was menaced by a rifle.

That Mr. Searles was vindictive, is known. A local editor who commented unfavorably upon Mr. Searles found to his amusement shortly afterward that he had lost his paper. When he tried to make a living as a baker he found some mysterious influence opposing him, so that eventually he left town, and thereafter his fellow-townsmen were extremely cautious in their comment upon Mr. Searles. On the whole Mr. Searles did little good with his money when he lived, and now that he has died it promises to be the cause of bitter quarrels. The least anarchical among us will agree that Mr. Hopkins might well have a reasonable kick that his fortune by first left to a man whom he never heard of, and by him to another man, a Canadian, his widow had never heard of.

A WESTERN LEGEND.

Monster Reptile With Horns Said to Live In Lake Winnipegosis.

Many strange reptiles and animals live on the earth and under the sea, and if we can believe what we hear, one of the strangest of them all has its habitat in Lake Winnipegosis.

For some years tales of a weird monster which inhabits this lake have come to the ears of residents of The Pas, and have usually been taken with a grain of salt, but many residents believe in the existence of this monster, and the Indians living in the locality where it is said to have been seen take the matter very seriously.

Mr. J. C. Murray, formerly editor of the Canadian Mining Journal, and Mr. B. A. C. Craig, K.C., have recently returned to The Pas, after a trip in the vicinity of Lake Winnipegosis, and both gentlemen solemnly declare that, although prepared by the tales they had heard of this denizen of the deep, I secured from Messrs. Murray and Craig a copy of the notes which they had taken of conversations regarding this matter with eye witnesses, and the stories they tell are as follows:

Valentine McKay of Grand Rapids informed these gentlemen that in September, 1919, he was canoeing in a canoe off Graves Point, in Dawson Bay, Lake Winnipegosis, towards High Portage into Cedar Lake, when, on rounding a point, he heard a strange rumbling sound in the water, and observed, some two hundred yards from the shore, a huge body, about sixteen feet in length of which was exposed, and around which the gulls were hovering. When he came opposite, and about 250 yards distant from it, it was creating a great disturbance. It shot out a great dipper on the left side of its body, and traveled in the manner of a sturgeon. The shallow waters of the bay, the water being disturbed as though by the propeller of a large boat. He watched it for half an hour. He did not see the monster's head. He had not a gun with him at that time, and would not embark on that lake again without a gun.

The chief haunt of this monster seems to be around Steep Rock Portage, on Dawson Bay. John McLeod, an Indian from Red Deer Lake, was camping near this portage when he noticed the creature above water, apparently resting. He paddled out with his wife to within 300 yards of it with the intention of shooting, but his wife became alarmed and prevented him from doing so. After watching it for a time, he paddled back to shore. He watched it until dark, but in the morning it had disappeared. A wind had risen, and the creature is only seen in calm weather. McLeod, like McKay, said the skin glistened like that of a sturgeon. The head, he said, was like that of a pig, with two projections resembling horns.

The Indian chief Kemach was shooting duck off Gray's Point when he saw what he thought was a moose out some distance in the water. He paddled out, but when he got closer found that it was an animal unknown to him, of enormous size, and retreated.

Many other Indians claim to have seen this reptilian monster, and rather than cross Dawson Bay will take a circuitous route around the shore.

Mr. Simpson, who was for many years manager at Shoal River, on Lake Winnipegosis, for the Armstrong Trading Company, and is the local postmaster, also strongly believes in the existence of this monster, and considers that the Government should send out an expedition to solve the mystery. He says that frequently new nets have been found torn to such an extent, and in such a manner, that it could not possibly have been done by fish.

Mr. B. M. Stitt, chief fire ranger for Northern Manitoba and Mayor of The Pas, returned in June, 1919, for Russell, a prospector from Nelson, B.C., and later of the R.A.F., was prospecting around Island Lake. Having heard of the stories of the monster in those waters, he was on the lookout, and one day observed something swimming across the lake. He paddled out towards it and found that it resembled a tremendous reptile, his description of which, even down to the horns, coincided with that given by McLeod of the monster he had seen in Lake Winnipegosis.

The Retort Courteous.

A Scottish witness was called in a case in the London Law Courts which involved questions connected with riparian rights. In the course of his evidence he naturally had to make use of the word "water" frequently, which he, equally naturally, pronounced as he had been accustomed to. Presently, an English barrister got up to cross-examine him, and, addressing him in a jaunty sort of way, with a view to getting a "rise" out of him, said, "I suppose that in your country they always spell 'water' with two 't's, eh?" Sandy, however, was equal to the occasion. "Oh, no," he replied, "they don't; but they spell 'manners' with two 'n's'."

Had Spoken His Last.

Rever: "Poor Brown! He's gone over to the silent majority."

Rover: "Why—I—when did he—is he dead?"

"No; married."

Fortune Had Odd Career

ARTHUR T. WALKER, formerly an Ontario school teacher, got his name in most of the newspaper in Canada and the United States a few days ago when it was announced that he had been made the chief heir of the late Edward F. Searles, by whom he had been employed for some years. It was said that he had inherited $50,000,000, but the probability is that the fortune is not less than this. People began to ask who was this Searles, and where had he accumulated all the money that he left to a humble clerk, and when the story was told it was a remarkable one. The last chapter of the Searles' romance is yet to be written, for his nephew, Victor Searles, an artist of some talent, who was cut off with a bequest $250,000, threatens to contest the will in an effort to prove that his uncle was of unsound mind. If he goes to law, and fails to succeed, he will forfeit the quarter of a million, and our own idea is that he would be foolish to do so. Victor Searles is fortunate in inheriting a quarter of a million dollars which he never earned, and no dollar for which his uncle ever worked. He is not really Searles' money at all. It is Hopkins' money.

Edward F. Searles was a New England boy by birth, and had hard hoeing in his younger days. About his chief asset was a fine presence and a well-filled exterior. He had nice taste also, and an ear for music, which probably explains why he did not enlist in the Civil War, for which he was highly eligible, but moved to another town and began to teach music. Eventually he adopted the profession of interior decorator, but his enemies said, he got a job as a paper hanger. In the pursuit of this calling he went to San Francisco, The West was still rather crude in those days, and Mr. Searles' dignified appearance, smooth manners and good looks brought him entrance to the best society. It was during the time when Mr. Searles became acquainted with Mrs. Hopkins she was employed in the decoration of her home on Nob Hill. Mr. Searles gave her tactful advice, and as time went on established himself as a friend.

In fact, Mrs. Hopkins became his sole customer. Having exhausted the decorative possibilities of the Hopkins mansion, Mr. Searles was commissioned to go to Great Barrington, Mass., and erect a magnificent building in the Berkshires for Mrs. Hopkins' use. He had complete charge of the operations, and as regards expense he was given what Ring Lardner would call "the meddous pile of jack," with a free rope to purchase works of art, and in one way and another spent a tremendous pile of money in carrying out the work. All this time the affections of Mrs. Hopkins, who was 68 years old, were ripening toward Mr. Searles, and after due consideration accepted her. Later on she changed her mind, but soon afterward his ardent pleadings melted her heart completely, and they were married. Mr. Searles at that time was 46 years old.

They lived together happily for a short period and then Mrs. Searles died, leaving the whole fortune to her husband. He was not permitted to enjoy it undisturbed, but was immediately attacked in the courts by Timothy Nolan Hopkins, nephew of the deceased Mark, who declared that Searles had unduly influenced his brother. SUFFERING OF YOUNG WOMEN

This Letter Tells How It May be Overcome—All Mothers Interested.

Toronto, Ont.—"I have suffered since I was a school girl with pains in my left side and with cramps, growing worse each year until I was down-down. I am a children's nurse, and my duties were too much for me at times that I was unfit for work. I tried several doctors and patent medicines, but was only relieved for a short time. Some of the doctors wanted to perform an operation, but my father objected. Finally I learned through my mother of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and how thankful I am that I tried it. I have relieved from pain entirely, and feel as if it has saved my life. You may use my letter to help other women, for I am only too glad to recommend the medicine."—JEAN KENT, 42 Blamford Ave., Toronto, Ont.

Girls who are troubled as Miss Kent was should immediately seek restoration to health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Those who need special advice may write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass. These letters will be opened, read and answered only by women and held in strict confidence.

In the course of his evidence he naturally had to make use of the word "water" frequently, which he, equally naturally, pronounced as he had been accustomed to. Presently, an English barrister got up to cross-examine him, and, addressing him in a jaunty sort of way, with a view to getting a "rise" out of him, said, "I suppose that in your country they always spell 'water' with two 't's, eh?" Sandy, however, was equal to the occasion. "Oh, no," he replied, "they don't; but they spell 'manners' with two 'n's'."

Had Spoken His Last.

Rover: "Why—I—when did he—is he dead?"

"No; married."

VICTOR ROUSSEAU

Few men know the lumber country of the north more intimately than Victor Rousseau, and in his story, "Wooden Spoil," which we are pleased to announce as our new serial, he gives us a background very vivid and accurate pictures of life among the French Canadians identified with this great industry. There is about that life a quaint beauty that cannot fail to interest you. This is all the more so when the story, as it does in the present instance, concerns a young American. Hilary Askew's uncle left him a Canadian timber tract to develop. It might have been easy enough to manage if circumstances had been propitious, but the young man soon found himself up against difficulties not mentioned in the forestry course which he had taken a few years before. A crooked lumber company, a grasping notary, a proud old seigneur and his Paris educated daughter are a few of Hilary's difficulties, some of which, it may be added, he enjoyed.

The author, born in England, was educated at Harrow and Oxford and fought in the Boer war. Afterward he came to the United States and became assistant editor of Harper's Weekly. He has been engaged in literary work ever since, contributing short stories and serials to most of the leading magazines.

VEGETABLE SEED.

British Columbia Product Every Way Equal to Imported.

Considering the strenuous efforts put forth by the Federal Department of Agriculture to induce Canadian farmers to produce home-grown seed of roots and vegetables to take the place of the shortage that resulted from the falling off of imports from Europe during the early years of the war, it would be a pity if those who responded to the call to produce this most necessary supply should lose all chance of profit from their now well-established business, through competition provided by our former enemies, or even by friendly Oriental countries that proved unable to supply our needs in the seed line when the need was most pressing.

In undertaking the business of growing seed of roots and vegetables on a large scale, the farmers of British Columbia accepted a considerable risk, in view of the fact that the industry was almost entirely new to the country, and the possibility of success was established on only the apparent suitability of the soil and climate, as they agreed with conditions in seed-producing areas in other countries. Now, however, the adaptability of certain sections of British Columbia to seed productions has been well proven, and it has been found that the seed produced is equal in every sense to the best imported seed and in the case of some varieties of roots and vegetables, vastly superior for use in Canada.

So far as the matter of price enters into consideration of the British Columbia seed growers' request for protection of their industry, there is no reason that farmers who are not seed growers should foresee an increase in the present price because the source of seed supply is limited to their own country. For the future, it may well be expected that production of the kinds of seed considered can be exported as economically in this country as abroad. The area suitable for such production is by no means limited, and what is most needed to promote increased production and consequent competition is a paying price for the product at this time when the industry is just starting. It can be easily recognized that the only feature that can account for cheaper production of seed where climatic and soil conditions are equal is cheap labor, and where are few farmers or others who would care to see labor prices in Canada reduced to the level of those existing in Europe.

Painting Interior of Silo.

In painting the interior walls of the wood silo do not use lead and oil paint; use carbolineum or some other creosote wood preservative. One of our subscribers advised us that he painted the interior of his silo with lead paint and the paint came off in small scale. After feeding silage for some time the cows showed signs of poisoning and seven died. A chemical analysis of the contents of the stomachs showed that lead poisoning was the cause of death.

CANADA'S MERCANTILE MARINE

A little while ago, the Navy League of Canada was campaigning in the Dominion for the development of what they call "the Sea Conscious Spirit Among Canadians."

No doubt many busy people, who heard the appeals, wondered what it was all about and why Canadians, not noted for "going down to the sea in ships" should be asked to develop such a "consciousness."

There seems to be a failure generally to grasp the significance of Canada's entry among the ship-owners for the handling of the commerce of this country overseas in the fleet which is being operated by Canadian Government Merchant Marine, Limited, in conjunction with Canadian National Railways.

The development of the fleet with a program of sixty-three new steel vessels, thirty-eight of which are already constructed and in service, is one of the most spectacular of the twentieth century, and is easily, in its effect upon Canadian trade, the largest single Canadian development within the last two decades.

Two new vessels have been turned over recently to the Company for operation—the "Canadian Carrier" and the "Canadian Squatter," each of 4,575 tons. These came down in Montreal in two parts from the Upper Lakes Shipyards at Port Arthur and Welland, respectively, where they were built, and were joined at the Canadian Metropolis. The "Carrier" left on her maiden voyage to Glasgow, October 30th, and the "Squatter" is to go into service shortly. Another vessel, the "Canadian Mariner" is to be added to the list soon. She is being built at Halifax.

These "National Ships of Canada," 41 of which are already in service are being kept constantly on the go. From both seaboards in Canada they are reaching out to all the big world ports, carrying Canadian-made goods abroad and bringing to us the merchandise we require from other lands. We will not run down exactly what these ships were doing the last day in October this year that Canadians may understand the amazing story of their activities.

In the North Atlantic, or British trade, the Canadian Highlander, "Canadian Aviator" was discharging cargo at Liverpool, the "Canadian Ranger" and the Canadian Conqueror" had arrived at the same port, the "Canadian Seigneur" was loading for Canada. The "Canadian Scout" and "Cruiser" was at Glasgow unloading and the "Canadian Voyageur" was loading at Cardiff. This makes nine vessels of the Canadian National fleet in British ports alone on that date. Moreover the Canadian Gaspe was in the River St. Lawrence bound for Glasgow. The "Canadian Navigator" was nearing Glasgow and the "Canadian Signaller" was at Glasgow. The "Canadian Otter" was on the way to London and the "Canadian Raider" for London and Cardiff. The "Canadian Miller" was unloading at Montreal for Liverpool.

In the Cuban and Jamaican trade, the "Canadian Leader" was homeward bound with a cargo of sulphur from Sabine, Texas. The "Canadian Sower" was discharging cargo at Quebec; and the "Canadian Trader" had sailed from Havana for Montreal.

In the Barbadoes, Trinidad and Demerara service, the "Canadian Beaver" cleared from Sydney, Nova Scotia, outward bound, and the "Canadian Farmer" from Trinidad, for Canada; the "Canadian Observer" was discharging cargo at Montreal.

In the South American trade, the "Canadian Victor" was loading at Montreal, and the "Canadian Planter", was unloading at Rio de Janiero; the "Canadian Spinner" was unloading at Buenos Ayres.

On that date, in the newly-established Indian trade, from the Atlantic side, the "Canadian Pioneer" was east of the Suez, in the Indian Ocean between Karachi and Bombay, from which port she was to continue to Colombo, up the east coast of India to Calcutta, Rangoon, Singapore, Straits Settlements and on to the Dutch ports of Batavia and Sarabuya, in Java.

In the Pacific service, the "Canadian Exporter" was discharging at Melbourne in Australia; the "Canadian Inventor" was on her way between Melbourne and Vancouver.

It would be an edgeation for most Canadians to watch the loading of one of the "Canadian" ships, the "Canadian Victor" for instance, loading for Trinidad in the British West Indies, Rio Janeiro and, Santos in Brazil Montevideo in Uruguay and Buenos Ayres in the Argentine Republic.

A large variety of Canadian-made goods were lowered into the holds; all classes of agricultural machinery, lumber from various sections of the country, Canadian made motor cars, Canadian-made cement, bodies for Angostura Bitters and the liquor trade in Trinidad, barbed wire from our mills, hay-rope, dry batteries for electrical purposes, cases of rubber shoes, and Canadian-made flour, comprising the cargo.

The growth of Canadian trade is becoming an important factor to Canadian manufacturers, via the "National" ships of Canada, but before the service was inaugurated, all of this business was handled through American ports.

The importance of this aspect of the Canadian export situation cannot be over-estimated. Every dollar conserved to Canada and through the handling of Canadian freights in Canadian ships and box cars, is a dollar on the right side of the business ledger of the country. As soon as our manufacturers and shippers, who trade overseas, realize this, Canadian vessels are certain to secure tonnage on a scale never approached before. The British Board of Trade estimated recently, according to a statement published by the Guaranty Trust Company, of New York, that

"The net earnings of British shipping this year will amount to approximately $2,200,000,000.00, which sum, the Board says, will not only offset Great Britain's excess of imports over exports for the year, but give the kingdom a favorable balance of $1,100,000,000.00. Shipping according to the British Board of Trade, thus will have brought in sufficient return to restore Great Britain to her former position of a creditor nation."

Using Canadian ships and keeping our freight earnings in Canada, would help most certainly to overcome any unfavorable balance of trade we might have with foreign countries.

The Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, Limited, have concluded satisfactory arrangements with the Holt Steamship interests at Liverpool and the British India Steam Navigation Company, Limited, for joint services between Atlantic and Pacific ports in Canada and the Orient, including India. Already one of the ships of the British India Company has called at a Canadian port and a cargo has been found for it by the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Government Merchant Marine. Likewise a full cargo has been secured by the British India Company for one of our ships now in Oriental waters.

So this "Sea Consciousness" is really fraught with vital significance to all the people of Canada. When one thinks of how the ships of England have moved their way into all the corners of all the seas; of how almost unbidden wealth has been poured into the "Tight Little Island" in the North Atlantic; of how through her ships she has expanded her Empire until in the world-wide then found cargo space to help in handling the goods sent out by other nations; only then does the true inwardness of the situation begin to be realized.

Every pound of Canadian produce shipped from a Canadian port speeds up our maritime growth, and strengthens our national prosperity.

Do You Like Good, Clean, Stirring Adventure?

Wooden Spoil

is a story that is different from any you have ever read. Old Jonas Askew sank a fortune in a tract of Canadian woodland ten miles square. He dies and leaves it to his nephew, Hilary.

Hilary sets out to take possession only to find Lamartine, the Quebec notary, Brousseau and Morris covertly lined up against him.

And then there are the Seigneur Rosny and his daughter. Into this strange new world of rough lumbermen, old French traditions and unscrupulous money powers Hilary steps to battle for his own. It is a tale that calls to your fighting spirit.

"I'm Delighted With What Tanlac Did For Me," Declares Henry Colin.

"I was just about down and out when I started on Tanlac, but that medicine has built me up to where I never felt better in my life," recently declared Henry Coffin, 152 Hillsborough street, Charlottetown, P.E.I.

"For the past twelve months I was in such an awful shape that I never expected to be a well man again. Everything I ate disagreed with me and I would bloat up terribly with gas. I had such pains after every meal that I was afraid to eat and fell off in weight until I was as thin as a rail and too weak to do heavy work. I also had trouble with my kidneys and had a continual pain across the small of my back. It was agony to use a saw or a plane and I often had to lay off from work for as much as ten days at a time. The pain from my back was so bad at night that I rarely got very much sleep and was getting worse all the time.

"The way Tanlac benefitted me was little short of marvelous. I soon had such an appetite that I was hungry all the time and could eat anything I wanted and never suffer from indigestion. The pains disappeared from my back and I haven't been bothered with my kidneys since. I have gained over ten pounds and am so much stronger that I can do as much work in one day as I used to in two. I'm on the job every day now and can work all day long without getting tired. I sleep like a log every night and get up in the mornings feeling just fine.

"Tanlac is sold in Napanee at WALLACE'S Drug Store, in Camden East by R. J. OSTER, in Wagarville by S. JACKSON.

Control of Insects.

Insects which attack vegetables may be divided into two groups—those which eat or chew the leaves or fruit, and those which suck the plant juice.

Biting insects may be poisoned by spraying the plants with poisonous solutions or by dusting them with poison powders. Potato beetles, flea Beetles, cabbage worms, striped cucumber beetles and similar biting insects may be held in check by spraying the plants with arsenate of lead paste at the rate of two pounds to 50 gallons of water. The spray sticks better, especially on smooth plants like cabbage, if a little soap or molasses is dissolved in the spray. The arsenate of lead may be obtained as a dry powder, mixed in a quantity of flour or air-slaked lime and dusted on the plants.

Sucking insects like plant lice may be held in check by spraying with soap suds, kerosene emulsion or tobacco decoction. Most insects are also repelled to a greater or less degree by the presence of fine dust, which tends to close the breathing pores. For that reason, it is best to keep the surface soil well tilled to maintain a dry, surface dust mulch. Wood ashes, air-slaked lime, insect powder or tobacco dust sprinkled on and about the plants also help to keep down insects.

Most fungous diseases such as celery rust and potato blight, may be held in check by spraying with bordeaux mixture; four pounds copper sulphate; four pounds lime; 50 gallons water.

When both insects and fungi are present, it is well to add two pounds of arsenate of lead paste to the 50 gallons of bordeaux mixture. This combination spray is to be recommended especially for potatoes to control the potato beetle and potato blight.

Canadian Holsteins for France.

A commission firm of Toronto has Secretary Clemens reports, received an order from the French Government to buy 150 Holstein bulls around eighteen months of age. It is rather remarkable that France should send across the Atlantic for Holstein bulls when the country of their origin is so close at hand, but it is undoubtedly due to the large records made on this side of the water and the reputation for producing ability which has been built up for Holsteins in Canada.

Egg Circle Benefits.

The object of a community egg circle is to secure and improve better strains of poultry; to produce more eggs of good color and size; to handle eggs more carefully in order to avoid waste; to pack a uniform grade of clean, fresh eggs, in order to be able to guarantee them and thus create a reputation; to market same more directly to the consumers; to purchase supplies in a co-operative way; and to do such other things as may prove of benefit to the members and the community.

A Little Niagara In Elgin.

In "The Ridge" in Yarmouth township, Elgin county, a considerable fruit-growing industry has been established. James Martin, one of the principal growers, has 3,000 trees in peaches, plums and cherries. On the farm of A. S. Rogers one hundred acres are set out in peaches, pears, apples, cherries and berries.

POULTRY NEED AIR.

Hen Is Fast Breather—Houses Must Be Open.

"The prime essentials in poultry houses," says an expert of the United States Department of Agriculture, "are fresh air, dryness, sunlight and space enough to keep the birds comfortable."

This expert here names principles in poultry house construction that have a universal application. Just why these are the important items is evident when we consider the nature of the birds. Mr. Charles L. Opperman gives these characteristics in a recent issue of the Country Gentleman, as follows:

"The hen is a fast breather, has a high body temperature — average 106 degrees — and oxidation within the body is very rapid. Unlike most animals, she does not sweat or pass liquid urine, which necessitates rapid respiration to throw off most of the body moisture. Thus it is plain to be seen that unless the air in the house is changed constantly it will soon become laden with moisture and contaminated by impurities given off by means of respiration and feces."

Obviously the air of the poultry house becomes saturated very quickly unless the air be of the best. And it is just here that we find the explanation of the success of the open-front house. We have all noticed in the closed house in cold weather how quickly the moisture frosts on the walls. This would be inimical to the health of any animal, much more one warm-blooded hen. Hence, in all countries, no matter how cold, the open-front house is proving its merit. Mr. J. W. Clarke tells of a hotelkeeper in North Bay, Ont., whose hens roosted in the trees with the temperature at 40 degrees below. Those hens, Mr. Clark tells us, were perfectly healthy and were laying. We would not advocate such exposure, but the incident does illustrate the foolishness of wasting good money in building what are mistakenly called "comfortable houses."

BIRDS IN WORLD WAR.

Pigeons Proved Themselves the Most Valuable.

Parrots were tried out early in the recent European conflict as war birds. A number of them were kept in cages on the Eiffel Tower, in Paris, to give warning of approaching aircraft.

They acquitted themselves wonderfully, announcing by their squawks the approach of an airplane or airship twenty minutes before its coming could be detected by human eyes or ears. Unfortunately, however, they were unable to distinguish between enemy and friendly aircraft; and, growing indifferent after a while, they ceased to be trustworthy.

The big war work was done by homing pigeons. Even when badly wounded, they would do their best to deliver the messages they carried.

A remarkable case in this line was that of pigeon No. 2709, which, on October 7, 1917, flying from the front line to divisional headquarters, was struck by a bullet that broke its leg, drove the metal cylinder containing the message into its breast and passed through its body. Nevertheless, it struggled home to its loft, nine miles away, and delivered the message, dying soon after its arrival. It now lives in a museum at Whitehall, stuffed, with a label, "Died of wounds received in action." A soldier who had done like service would have received the V.C.

In 198 a pigeon post service in London carried messages of subscribers to the war loan, delivering them at the Tank Bank in Trafalgar Square.

The Germans sometimes camouflaged their war pigeons with coats of paint, and in some instances at least they made the cotes gaasproof.

Carriers, is well known, saved the lives of thousands of fighting men by the warning they gave of poison gas. A percentage of it is the all-imperceptible to human being caused them to drop off their perches—a signal that it was time for the soldiers to put on their gas masks. But in many cases the birds became such pets that the men would keep them in places as safe from gas as possible, thus negativing the purpose for which they were meant to be used.

Gulls, actuated perhaps by curiosity, had a way of following and hovering over submerged U-boats, thereby betraying their whereabouts in a way most unsatisfactory to the Germans, but highly profitable to the British who were hunting for them.

As for the parrots, a boker offered the clever suggestion that they might to advantage be crossed with the homing pigeons, so that the latter could deliver the messages.

CHAPTER I.

The Rosny White Elephant.

The office in Quebec which Georges Lamartine, the notary, occupied was located inconspicuously in a small building in an old part of the Lower Town. Small, wiry, black-haired, with an air of unconvincing plausibility about him, Monsieur Lamartine was seated at his desk, drumming his fingers, staring out of the window, and turning again to look at a letter signed Hilary Askew, when his boy brought him a card with the same name upon it. Monsieur Lamartine frowned.

"Tell Monsieur Askew that I am busy with an important court case," he said. "Ask him to call at this time tomorrow."

"Mr. Askew says he's busy, too, and he'll wait," announced the boy, returning.

The notary considered. "Well, tell him I'll see him in a few minutes," he answered.

When the boy was gone he took down the telephone receiver and gave a number.

"Is that you, Bronsseau?" he asked. "Monsieur Hilary Askew has turned up."

There was a sputtering at the other end of the line which made the notary smile.

"I can't say. I haven't seen him yet," said Monsieur Lamartine, in answer. "But if I can't send him home with a smile on his lips and a check in his pocket I shall try to keep him in Quebec until I have seen you. And you'd better try to get Morris by long distance and warn him. Good-by."

He hung up the receiver, rang for the boy and told him to admit Mr. Askew. Then he rose to receive his visitor.

He looked at Hilary keenly as he shook hands with him. The young man was different from what he had expected. He was about as big, and he had the same air of American energy; but he appeared more determined; he looked like one of those uncomfortable men who have the knack of disentangling themselves from sophistries. However, Hilary looked good-natured. And he was certainly inexperienced. Monsieur Lamartine gave him a chair and looked very plausible indeed.

"Your visit has followed very close upon your letter, Mr. Askew," he said. "Perhaps you did not get mine, advising you to wait before coming to Quebec?"

"No," said Hilary, "but I would have come anyway. I want to get this matter settled."

"The American haste," said the notary looking almost ingenuous. "But the law is not to be taken by storm, least of all in Quebec. It is only a month since your uncle died. Perhaps it will be months before we can turn over the property to you. I understand that you were not in close touch with your uncle during his latter years?"

"I hadn't seen him since I was a boy. That was what made the legacy a surprising one. He had not shown any interest in me. I had a hard fight to get through my forestry course. So when I heard that I had become the owner of a tract of a hundred square miles it seemed like an intervention of Providence. That is almost a kingdom, sir."

"Ten miles by ten?" inquired the notary, smiling. "Well, I suppose it does seem a large territory to you, although the Rosny seigniory was one of the smallest of the old feudal grants It is almost the last on the north shore of the St. Lawrence that remains in the hands of the original family."

"Four hundred thousand dollars seems a big sum for my uncle to have paid for it," said Hilary.

"Your uncle," said Monsieur Lamartine, beginning to drum softly, "made this investment against the advice of a good many people. The Rosny timber rights are practically valueless, because the wood is principally balsam fir instead of pine and spruce."

He noted that Hilary only watched him instead of answering, and he began to feel that he would not be disposed of as easily as he had anticipated.

"The property has never begun to pay its way," continued Monsieur Lamartine. "Your uncle paid three hundred and fifty thousand for the cutting rights alone. He found himself up against the law which places a limit on the size of trees. Seven inches for black, or swamp spruce, I believe; twelve for white spruce; twelve or thirteen for pine. And nearly all the trees on the Rosny limits that aren't fir are under the legal size. Your uncle sank half his fortune in it. He was—excuse me—eccentric. This is the case: the timber cannot be cut except at a loss, on account of its sparseness and the high cost of transportation. The balsam fir is too gummy to make any but inferior paper, below the standard even of the newspapers. It occupies the greater portion of the tract, together with second growth birch, which is, of course, of use only for firewood. The expenses are very considerable. In short, Mr. Askew, I cannot advise you to consider your uncle's legacy seriously."

"I'm sorry to hear that," answered Hilary. "But I suppose something can be done with the wood. There are uses besides pulp-wood to which the timber can be put?"

Monsieur Lamartine drummed his fingers for quite a while before answering.

"A company with a large capital might find it commercially profitable to develop your tract," he said presently. "But no man without an ample fortune and a thorough knowledge of lumber conditions in this province could dream of pulling out even."

Hilary leaned forward in his chair. "Monsieur Lamertine," he said, "I'll tell you how I view this matter. I didn't build any extravagant hopes upon my uncle's legacy. I'm not constructed that way. What I want principally is to settle somewhere among trees and do something with them. I'm tired of what I've been doing these past five years.

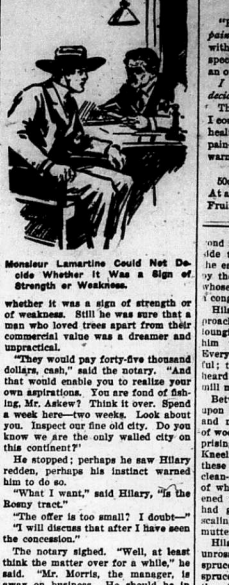
"I'm tired of hunting a job here and a job there to tend somebody else's trees. I'm tired of other people's trees. I want my own trees. I want to see them grow up, and thin them out, and have a real forest in bearing.

"So I've decided to take hold of that St. Boniface tract and see what I can make of it. I'm going to show my uncle, Monsieur Lamartine, that he sized me up wrong."

Monsieur Lamartine smiled at his caller's frankness.

"I understand how you feel, Mr. Askew," he said. "What you want is a nice little tract of a few hundred acres, not far from Quebec. A place with a little trout lake on it, to build your camp beside, ten acres freehold and the rest leased. You'll enjoy that, and"—he paused and scrutinized him with his fox look—"I think I may be able to dispose of the Rosny white elephant for you."

Hilary returned no answer, and Monsieur Lamartine could not decide whether it was a sign of strength or of weakness. Still he was sure that a man who loved trees apart from their commercial value was a dreamer and unpractical.



Monsieur Lamartine Could Not Decide Whether It Was a Sign of Strength or Weakness.

"They would pay forty-five thousand dollars, cash," said the notary. "And that would enable you to realize your own aspirations. You are fond of fishing, Mr. Askew? Think it over. Spend a week here—two weeks. Look about you. Inspect our fine old city. Do you know we are the only walled city on this continent?"

He stopped; perhaps he saw Hilary redden, perhaps his instinct warned him to do so.

"What I want," said Hilary, "is the Rosny tract."

"The offer is too small? I doubt—"

"I will discuss that after I have seen the concession."

The notary sighed. "Well, at least think the matter over for a while," he said. "Mr. Morris, the manager, is away on business. He should be in Quebec tomorrow, and perhaps he can arrange to take you there."

"I am thinking of going at a very early date," said Hilary, "in fact, by the boat tomorrow."

"Mr. Askew, I assure you, you had better wait for Mr. Morris. He is a man of expert judgment. You cannot have a better adviser, and he has absolutely no personal interest one way or another. There are so many things to consider; and then—you don't speak French, do you?"

"A little."

"It would not help you, anyway. The dialect up at St. Boniface is seventeenth century. They are a wild lot up there, a very bad lot of people; smugglers and poachers, Mr. Askew."

Hilary, who had already sensed Lamartine's objection to his going to St. Boniface, awakened to suspicion at last. "I shall leave on tomorrow morning's boat," he said. "When I have made my decision I shall let you know.

I think I shall refuse your company's offer. Will you let me have the papers, Monsieur Lamartine, including the last half-yearly statement and the map of the limits?"

"But it is entirely irregular, Mr. Askew. Really—"

"Let me have the papers, please," said Hilary, smiling. "And you need have no fear that you will be held responsible for my anticipating my inheritance. I imagine I have as much right there as Mr. Morris."

"Of course, if that is your decision, there is nothing more to say," answered the other brusquely. He pulled out a drawer and removed an envelope containing some documents. "You will find the statement here," he said. "Mr. Morris has the books and the map of St. Boniface. I wish you a pleasant journey, sir. You wish me to continue to represent you?"

"For the present, yes. Good-day."

When he was gone Monsieur Lamartine sat back in his chair and drummed his fingers for nearly a minute. Then he called up Brousseau.

"He's just gone," he said. "And he starts for St. Boniface tomorrow morning, in spite of all my representations."

He smiled at the sputtering that came over the wire.

* * * * *

It was well into the afternoon when Hilary reached St. Boniface on the small tri-weekly mail boat. For fifty or sixty miles below Quebec the country, sparsely inhabited though it is, and primitive, contains settlements with shingled houses, hotels, tourists in season; and it was not until the St. Lawrence widened into the Gulf that Hilary realized, almost with surprise, that the ship was sailing into a territory as primitive as it had been a score of years after Jacques Cartier landed. Something of the primeval nature of the land entered Hilary's heart and gripped it. He had never known what it was he wanted. But he knew now: it was to take hold of a virgin land and tame it, to grapple with life, not among the men of cities, but somewhere with the smell of the pines and of the brown earth in his nostrils. Facing the deck of the little ship, he felt that his desires had come to light at the moment when their fulfillment had become possible.

He looked about him with approval when he stood upon the porch of the tiny hotel at St. Boniface. Nobody else had got off the boat, and evidently the landlord of the little hotel expected nobody. After an ineffectual attempt to enter into conversation with him, in which hardly a word was mutually intelligible, Hilary gave up the effort and started up the hill road which led, he surmised, toward the lumber mill.

The whole settlement was gathered about the shores of the little bay. Beyond it were the mountains, on either side the forest-clad hills, broken, on the east, by an inlet, and on the west by the deep cleft of the Rocky river, whose mouth, closed by a boom, was a congested mass of logs.

Hilary crossed the bridge and approached the mill. Two or three men, lounging outside the store, looked at him without any sign of interest. Everything was very still and peaceful; there was hardly a sound to be heard except the distant hum of the mill machinery.

Between the dam and the store, upon a terrain heaped with tin cans and miscellaneous debris, were piles of wood in four-foot lengths, each comprising about two hundred cords. Kneeling at the narrow end of one of these piles was a little man, whose clean-shaven upper lip, the whiteness of which contrasted with a sun-blackened face, indicated that a mustache had grown there recently. He was scaling, or measuring, the pile, and muttering as he added up his figures.

Hilary surveyed the lumber. It was unrossed, and most of it was black spruce; there was also some white spruce and a little pine. The mass in the river, if it consisted of wood of the same quality, harshly substantiated Lamartine's statements.

"You seem to have some good spruce on the seigniory," said Hilary.

The little man leaped to his feet, waving his arms. "What you want here?" he demanded. "Strangers are not permitted on the company's property. If you want to buy at the store, you go by the road."

Hilary looked down coolly at the excited little man. "I'm Mr. Askew, and I've come to take charge of my property," he answered.

The little man was bereft of vocal powers for quite some time.

"But Mr. Morris, he ain't here," he gasped at length.

"Well, he ought to be here. That's what I'm paying him for," said Hilary. "What's your name?"

"Jean-Marie Baptiste."

"Perhaps you didn't expect me, Monsieur Baptiste?"

"Holy Name, no! It was said that you had sold out to the company."

"What company?" demanded Hilary.

"The company at Ste. Marie. Monsieur Brousseau's company."

"See here, Baptiste," said Hilary, taking the other by the arm. "Let us begin by understanding each other. I know nothing about any company except myself. I own this district, the land, the timber, the mill. Have you got that?"

Jean-Marie gaped again, and then diplomatically disengaged himself.

"I guess you want to see Mr. Connell, the foreman," he said. "It ain't my job. You'll find Mr. Connell in the store."

"Bring him here," said Hilary. "Tell him I'm waiting for him."

The little man departed at a trot, quite evidently startled and scared, and casting back comical looks from time to time over his shoulder as he went.

His statement in the store must have created a good deal of sensation, for presently two clerks, as well as the two loungers, who had gone inside, came to the door and stared, exchanging himself from among these came the foreman, a tall, lean, lanky New Englander, whose deliberate slouch and typical bearing warmed Hilary's heart instantly. He knew the type, knew it as only one with the New England blood knows his own.

"I'm Lafe Connell, at your service, Mr. Askew," said the foreman, coming up to Hilary and standing respectfully before him.

"I suppose I should have let you people know that I was coming," said Hilary.

He wondered why Lafe Connell whistled; he knew nothing about Brousseau's telephoned warning.

"I guess you'll find things upset a little," said Connell. "Mr. Morris has been away for a couple of weeks, seeing to his other interests, and I can't exactly do much for you till he comes back. It's our slack month, you know, Mr. Askew. The men don't go into the woods until September, and we don't keep a large force employed on the mill work."

"Tomorrow's soon enough to start in," said Hilary. "I'm pleased to have met you, Mr. Connell."

"Wait a minute," said the foreman "If you don't mind having me, I'll go up to the hotel with you. Maybe there'll be some things that you'll want to ask me."

"All right," said Hilary.

They went together silently across the shaking bridge and ascended the hill, each quietly taking stock of the other. At the top, where a branch road ran off at right angles to that which crested the cliff, a figure on horseback appeared in the distance.

It was a girl, riding side-saddle. As the horse drew near she pulled in to take the branch road without scattering the dust, passing within a few feet of Hilary. He saw that she was about twenty years of age, or a little more, slight, very straight upon the saddle, with gray-blue eyes and brown hair blown by the wind about her flushed cheeks. There was a combination of dignity and simplicity about her, both in her demeanor and in the way she rode, and in her acknowledgment of Connell's greeting.

Hilary watched her canter up the road till she had disappeared among the trees. Then he realized that he had not taken his eyes off her since he had first seen her.

"That," said Lafe, "is Mamzelle Madeleine Rosny."

"That," said Lafe, "is Mamzelle Madeleine Rosny."

Madeleine Rosny. Her father's what they call the Seigneur."

"The owner of the Chateau?" asked Hilary, although he knew this perfectly.

"Yes, Mr. Askew. I guess she wouldn't have smiled so pleasant if she had known who you was."

"Why, Mr. Connell?"

Lafe jerked his thumb vaguely about the horizon. "Proud old boy," he explained. "Family's been here nigh on a thousand years, I guess—leastways, since them Frenchmen first came to this continent. Hated like thunder to sell out to your uncle. But I guess he was land poor, like the rest of them, and Mamzelle Madeleine must have cost him a mint of money finishing up in the convent at Paris, France."

Hilary turned this over in his mind as they continued their walk along the cliff and then down the road to the hotel. The idea of any personal illfeeling on the Seigneur's part or on that of his family had not occurred to him. Though he did not expect to meet Monsieur Rosny, except possibly in the course of his business, he was conscious of a feeling of regret, and also of a half-formed resolution, the nature of which he would not admit, to put relations upon a pleasant footing.

In the hotel the landlord's wife was already preparing supper. They ate an omelet, washed down with strong tea and followed by raspberries and cream. Then they went out on the porch and lit their pipes.

"You are the foreman, I understand?" asked Hilary.

"Yes, Mr. Askew. I took the job soon after your uncle bought the timber rights. I'd been up here for the Shoeburyport Gazette, which was looking for a pulp supply. Mr. Morris offered me the job, and I took it. And I've been sorry ever since."

"Why?"

"It's a h—— of a country," answered Lafe frankly. "I never felt as how folks existed in a civilized land before. Now you take a Dutchman or a Dago—their ways ain't our ways, but they're more or less human. These people ain't. They paint their houses yellow and green, when they paint 'em at all. I never saw a yellow house with a green porch in my life till I come up here."

"Just a difference of taste, Mr. Connell."

"Maybe," said Lafe, spitting. "Maybe it's all right not to have sense to plaster their houses, so as to freeze to death in winter time. Maybe it's all right to run to Father Lucy when there's a fever or fire, instead of getting to work and putting it out. Maybe he can pray it out for them. I got nothing against the place, except that my wife Clarice and the kids are in Shoeburyport, and I'd rather not here alone than bring 'em up. But what's the use? I'm here and I got to stay here," he ended, shrugging his shoulders.

Lafe was a bad cross-questioner, and the task put upon him by Brousseau was not only uncongenial but impossible for a man of his temperament. However, he made a valiant attempt to draw Hilary out. "You're thinking of spending some time here, Mr. Askew?" he asked.

"I've come to take charge. I'm going to stay," said Hilary.

Lafe looked at him curiously. What sort of a man could this be who chose of his volition to reside in St. Boniface?

"I guess you'll change your mind when you've seen it a little longer," he said incredulously.

"On the contrary, Mr. Connell, I mean to take hold, and I mean to make it pay. It hasn't paid very well, I understand?"

Lafe floundered. "I've heard it don't pay as much as it ought."

"I understand that most of the timber is below the size at which cutting is allowed."

Lafe stared at him. "Why, them rules are for government land!" he answered. "You can cut any size on freehold. The timber ain't so bad—leastways, some of it ain't."

Hilary began to think hard. On this point Lamartine had clearly and definitely lied to him.

"Too much fir on the property?" he asked.

"Why, there is some fir," conceded Lafe. "But there's some good spruce along the Rocky river," he added, again oblivious of his instructions.

"I saw a good pile in the river."

"Why, that ain't our cutting—not much of it," said Lafe. "Most of that comes from the Ste. Marie limits."

"Where is Ste. Marie?"

"Ste. Marie's two miles along the coast, beyond our settlement," said Lafe. "Most of our hands come from there. It's a tough place, Mr. Askew. I seen some tough towns in the West, but this has got 'em all beat, with the smuggling of brandy, and the drinking, and the fights every Saturday night—there was a man knifed there last week; and not a policeman within fifty miles, and nobody except Father Lucy, and he can't hold 'em."

"What I want to know," said Hilary, "is, what this company is that you speak about, and how they come to use the Rocky river for their logs."

Lafe hesitated, but only for a moment. Then he mentally cast Brousseau to the winds; for, after all, if Hilary meant to know, nobody could prevent it. Brousseau's instructions notwithstanding.

"It's this way, Mr. Askew," he said. "Mr. Morris and Mr. Brousseau have a company of their own. Their limits touch ours on the west, across the river, and run ten miles or so back into the bush, right alongside ours. They got the right to float their logs down the river."

"And use the mill?"

"Mr. Morris leases the use of our mill by the year to the company."

Hilary was staggered for the moment. Morris, as his uncle's manager, leasing the mill to Morris, a partner in Brousseau's company, seemed a queer role.

"How do they tell our lumber from theirs?" asked Hilary presently.

"Oh, that ain't hard," said Lafe. "You see, the jobbers, who sublease the tracts, know how much their men have cut. And it's scaled in the woods before they start it down stream. I guess there ain't no difficulty there, Mr. Askew. And you see, Mr. Morris representing both concerns, he naturally does his best by both of 'em."

Hilary's suggestions, dormant even after the interview with Lamartine, were now thoroughly aroused.

WINTER CLOTHES FOR TOTS

Velveteen and Broadcloth, Plainly Made, Promise to Be Among Popular Fabrics.

Velveteen is to play an important part in the development of next winter dresses for little girls. These are always made on very straight, simple lines. The majority of those seen so far are finished with plain satin or Roman striped ribbon sashes.

For children of six years or younger very fine broadcloth appears to be the favorite coat fabric for the coming season. Some of the garments brought out have interlining, for greater warmth, but the weight of the coat required depends entirely on the climate. Plushes and imitation furs serve as very effective trimmings on many little coats. The mother who tackles the job of making her little daughter's winter wrap may make a muff and bonnet or hat to match.

A Witness Testifies

SHE WAS WEAK AND NERVOUS

Brampton, Ont.:—"About five years ago I began suffering with woman's trouble. I became all run-down weak and nervous. I was so completely down and out that I could not do anything, could scarcely dress myself. I had the doctor and took other medicine but without getting better until I began taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and his Golden Medical Discovery. It was only necessary for me to take about three bottles when I was completely restored to health and strength and I have been in better health than I ever was before. I have had no use for medicine since, but should I need it I would take these same remedies, knowing them to be excellent."—MRS. HARRY KNIGHT, Jessie St.

OWES HER LIFE

Ft. Saskatchewan, Alta.:—"It is with great pleasure that I write the following and I hope it will help the many sufferers who do not know the good Dr. Pierce's medicines would do them if they would try them.

"In regard to my condition, I will say that I suffered from childhood from a very weak back; I had the misfortune of having spinal meningitis when I was one year old and until I was 13 I did not see a well day, but a very kind lady told my mother about Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and she got a bottle to try it. It did me so much good that mother got me 6 bottles. Recently I happened with a car accident and hurt my back badly. My doctor gave me up and said I would not live, but I still stick to Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and to my surprise in three weeks I was out of bed and better. Now my life to it and nothing else, and shall never be without it.

"If any sufferer wishes to write I will answer with pleasure."—MRS. NOEL BARTHOLOMEW.

FALL FASHION NOTES

Gold cloth evening gowns have girdles of jet.

Daytime frocks feature a new wool poplin which pleits well.

Copper-colored shoes and stockings for daytime wear are the latest fad in Paris.

A warmth of color, softness of texture, and flowing grace of line is promised for the frocks.

The coat dress will be a popular fall model, while long, swathing scarfs, short capes and coats with the vestee effect will grace the slim forms of the fair sex.

Odd colors prevail in high-class corsets of silk fabrics, blue, lavender, yellow and pale green sharing honors with the long-established flesh pink and white.

French gloves are unusually attractive. Open work latticing, stencelling, combination of two colors of kid and embroidery are all used as ornamentation. Gauntlets are fluted or vandyked, a new departure being the gauntlet which turns back like an inverted frill above the elbow.

BRACELET AND BAG

Arm Decoration Is to Continue as Winter Fashion.

Handbag Is Indispensable Adjunct—New Autumn Models More Elaborate Than Ever.

Jewelers are watching quite as anxiously to see what the new fashions for fall will be as are the women who will buy the models now being created. It is really difficult to imagine the head of a big jewelry firm feeling any anxiety about the length of a sleeve—but he does; for on the length of the sleeve hangs the fate of the sale of bracelets.

It is doubtful if there ever has been a period in the history of the world when so many bracelets were worn as during the past year. Perhaps the ancient Egyptian beauties might have competed with the modern women in this respect, for they had the advantage of wearing bracelets on their ankles as well as on their arms.

While Paris shows many dresses with long sleeves and some with short sleeves American women will hold to the short-sleeved frock for this winter at least. We were rather slow in accepting it and we will probably be equally slow in discarding it. Tube of course, means that quantities of bracelets of all sorts will be worn. Jewelers will continue to reap a big crest from the sale of bracelets this winter.

The handbag continues to be a most indispensable adjunct to the fashionable toilet. The new models for autumn are, if anything, more elaborate than ever. Some of the new tailored bags are being made of beadings of silk braid sewn together in circles to form the sides. The bag is then ornamented with pendants of enameled wood beads in that oval shape. This, with a frame of ivory, results in a very elaborate affair.

Elaborate embroideries in colored silk are seen on other new bags. A beautiful model developed in gray faille has a nouveau art floral design in varicolored embroidery. The frame is self-covered and the handle of silk is ornamented with enameled wooden ball slides.

For Class-Room Wear.

Cotton crepe, often too warm for summer, is ideal for class-room wear. It is a material that lends itself readily to rubbing, while the ironing of it is almost a minus quantity. It can be had in the warm, medium shades, navy, deep blues, bright tans, rose shades, leaf greens, etc., which are becoming to young folks and are almost as practical as the very dark colors.

COIN DOTS OF GREEN VELVET

Blouse of couture brown Klimax satin with applique coin dots of green velvet, worn with box plaited skirt of pussy willow satin.

FOR THE PORCH AND GARDEN

Furniture and Accessories Suitable for Outdoor Use and Which Resist Weather.

"Of all the furnishing problems that confront the home decorator none is more fascinating than that of converting the porch or terrace into a charming outdoor room to which family and guests alike instinctively gravitate," writes Winnifred Fales in Good Housekeeping.

"The undertaking is delightfully easy, for nowadays appropriate furniture, fabrics, and accessories are obtainable in such limitless variety that the only real difficulty is to keep a reasonably tight hold on the purse strings, instead of yielding to the impulse to buy every new and enchanting thing that offers.

"The modern use of weatherproof materials and finishes for porch and garden furnishings has done much to encourage outdoor living by making it no longer necessary to drag heavy chairs and tables into the house at the first hint of a shower. Far from being injured by rain, the various basket types of furniture are actually improved by it, and even an occasional drenching will do them no harm. Indeed, the accepted cure for rattan and natural willow pieces that have begun to sag and lose their resiliency is to set them out on the lawn and administer a copious shower bath with the garden hose. While this remedy is a trifle drastic, for fiber and willow furniture that has been stained or painted in the ordinary manner, even these types will successfully withstand fog and dampness."

USE "DIAMOND DYES"

Dye right! Don't risk your material. Each package of "Diamond Dyes" contains directions so simple that any woman can diamond-dye a new, rich color into old garments, draperies, coverings, everything, whether wool, silk, linen, cotton or mixed goods.

Buy "Diamond Dyes"—no other kind—then perfect results are guaranteed even if you have never dyed before. Druggist has "Diamond Dyes Color Card"—16 rich colors.

SWEEPING AND DUSTING

(By U. S. Public Health Service.)

In sweeping a room raise as little dust as possible, because dust, when breathed in, irritates the nose and throat and may set up catarrh. Some of the dust breathed is carried to the lungs, making portions of them black and hard and useless.

To prevent raising dust in sweeping bare floors, use moist sawdust. When the room is carpeted, moisten a newspaper, tear it into small scraps and scatter these over the carpet. In sweeping, brush these scraps of paper along with the broom and they will catch most of the dust and hold it fast, just as the sawdust does on bare floors. Do not have the paper or sawdust dripping wet—only moist.

In dusting a room, do not use a feather duster, because this does not remove the dust from the room, but only brushes it into the air. Use soft dry cloths to dust with, and shake them frequently out of the window; or use slightly moistened cloths and rinse them out in water when finished. In this way the dust can be gotten out of the room.

In rooms which have bare floors, in houses, stores, shops, school rooms, etc., all dust can be easily removed after it has settled by passing over the floor a mop which has been wrung out so as to be only moist, not dripping wet.

A BIBLE LOVER.

A quiet wedding was solemnized on Nov. 16th at Shannonville, when Arthur M. Keene, of the 2nd Line Thurlow, was united in the bonds of matrimony to Miss Ethel McCabe, Marysville. The young couple were unattended.

Farmers residing in Thurlow township have recently had a number of fowls stolen. Wm. Clazie had upwards of eighty taken, and others lost nearly fifty. Frank Stevens and George Smith, two strangers, were caught in W. A. Claise's hen coop, Saturday. They appeared before Magistrate Masson, Belleville, charged with breaking into a building with intent to steal. The accused desired trial at higher court and were committed for trial after a preliminary examination.

To the hunter or fisherman looking for new places to hunt and fish ROD AND GUN IN CANADA for December will prove valuable. In a splendidly illustrated article, W. L. Edmonds, the well-known writer, graphically pictures the wild life of the Dominion, including the Northwest Territories, Bonnycastle Dale takes his readers with him on a goose shooting trip after the big Canadas. In a reminiscent style Judge Fraleck describes the good old days in an interesting story of the Wayside Inn. The dog that is growing in favor every day is the Airedale terrier and in addition to the splendid cover painting by F. V. Williams, he has a story entitled, "Pluck," that will appeal to everyone. The various departments, Guns and Ammunition; Fishing; Conservatism; Trap, Line and Kennel are up to their usual high standard. ROD AND GUN IN CANADA is published monthly by W. J.
